This cabochon of petrified wood, an unusual and rare form from Hell's Canyon near the Idaho/Oregon border. It is said to be sequoia, showing fascinating wavy annual growth lines in a herringbone pattern. This example has great contrasting lines, as well as an amazing pattern of elongated holes. Very beautiful material. Freeform shape ready to be wire wrapped or set in a bezel.

This large oval designer cabochon of Woodward Ranch plume, from Texas. This distinctive material is a longtime favorite, for its wonderful translucence and colorful figure. This one has several delicate plumes in the most desirable red and black colors all in a clear agate background. The back is not polished. Wonderful piece to add to your jewelry collection.

Here is an enchanting cabochon of Priday moss agate, from the Priday Ranch digs in Oregon. This was cut by my husband from some thunder eggs we purchased while we were in Oregon this last summer. The moss in this one is replaced by a shimmering drusy. This piece would look perfect wire wrapped or set in a bezel.

This gemstone is cut from treated Mohave Purple Turquoise. We purchased a block of this vividly colored material from the nice folks who mine Kingman turquoise in Arizona. It is composed of small chunks of natural blue turquoise, to which they added a dye to give it is different color and then its formed into a square shape. They also have other colors like a lime green and a blue with the brass veining that I may buy in the future. Nice tear drop shape ready to be wire wrapped or set in a bezel.

This flowering tube onyx, from Utah. This unique material is simply stunning in its complex and varied patterns. It has scalloped bulls-eyes and concentric banding. The yellow, gray and black hues of this type of onyx. There are few typical healed hairlines, though they're not overly distracting. Its a very solid cabochon ready to be wire wrapped or set in a bezel.
